3. At the Director's request I telephoned Captain Durham of the Navy Bureau of Personnel who is the DOD representative on a Federal Retirement Systems study. I told Captain Durham that Admiral Raborn hoped some language could be put into their report which would eliminate the discriminatory provisions against retired regular officers of the armed services who may work for the Government in a civilian capacity. Captain Durham said he appreciated the Admiral's concern but he saw no hope of getting any further relief. In fact, if there should be any change in dual compensation statutes, they would be in the direction of bringing retired reserve officers under the same dual compensation statutes under which regular officers now find themselves.
